

The Lancastrian Times

Issue 3, Vol. 1

24th September 1483

Fun & Games at the Tower

Our reliable sources at the Tower have just received news that our gloriously deformed monarch has recently commissioned the building of a ‘playground’ at the Tower. Apparently a large amount of money is being spent to convert an old torture room in one of the prison towers. This strange change of décor was ordered by none other than Richard himself.

Earlier today we managed to ask the deceitful dictator a few questions about this strange, flea brained venture.

“I have decided to convert the old torture room into a playroom, using some of the equipment that’s already there” said Richard. “I’ve always enjoyed playing with children, especially small boys, and once the new playroom is finished, I’m thinking of inviting my two young nephews down” he said with a smile.

Richard has always been a big kid, said the Yorkist High Council, and he regularly takes part in the children’s fun days, and even wins some of the games that they play.

He gets on well with the children, says Lord Warwick, and he has a natural ability to communicate with them on the same level. However the King does sometimes throw the odd tantrum when we have to drag him away from his toys and back into court to deal with issues of the realm.

But, I guess being the King isn’t all fun and games, it’s hard work and it can be bloody murder!

MISSING LORD!

Lord Rivers has been reported missing. If you have any information of his location please contact the King’s Guards at the guardhouse, London.

He was last seen talking to King Richard about the strange humped mutants currently roaming the Yorkshire Dales.

Shocking Display

Our King, Richard III (seen at a friend’s funeral below) has locked himself away at Middleham castle after a temper tantrum that has shocked the usually unshockable and deprived Northern locals.

“King” Richard III at the funeral of a close friend

The trouble began when Richard’s Bridge partner was taken suddenly and un-expectedly dead after a poor hand of cards. Springing up from his throne Dick started demanding, “A fourth! A fourth! My Kingdom for a Fourth!”. A minor Lord was persuaded to join in to complete the quartet.

However, after loosing the first hand he too became mysteriously and suddenly dead.

Sports Results: Ye Olde Football

Lancastrian Heroes 6 Yorkist Bed Wetters 0